Looking for Lincoln Story Trail

On our website, you can find a sample rubbing template that you just print and take with you and don't forget your camera! If you take a photo of each wayside and make a few notes and observations on your rubbing template, when you are finished, you will have a complete record of your travels that you can enjoy for years to come from your time on the

We want to help you find all of them!
We've created a general map to show you where the Looking for Lincoln Story Trail communities are located. Courtesy of our friends at the Professional Land Surveyors Association, we have been supplied with the GPS coordinates for every single wayside and there is a Google Map® on our website that features this and more information!

To make each experience even more fun and interesting, every wayside has a completely unique 4¢ coin medallion that contains an image based upon one of the stories from that particular wayside. The raised image, called a bas relief is designed so that you can take a souvenir rubbing and all you need are some simple rubbing materials — a crayon and sheet of plain, white paper will work.

Looking for Lincoln has found an exciting way to tell intriguing Lincoln stories that are unique to each community. Local historians and Lincoln enthusiasts collaborated with Looking for Lincoln in identifying people, stories, and events that connect each community to Lincoln's story. Together, we designed wayside exhibits that describe all of those thrilling tales that took place on Lincoln's unimaginable journey to greatness. While some communities might just have a single wayside, some have as many as 15 or 18, while Springfield has 48. Altogether there are 215 exhibits in 52 communities.

Abraham Lincoln National Heritage Area

The Looking for Lincoln Heritage Coalition was designated by Congress to manage the 42-county Abraham Lincoln National Heritage Area, highlighted in the map below. It honors and celebrates the area where Lincoln lived and traveled for more than 30 years practicing law, running for office, and raising a family before becoming the 16th President of the United States.

Now you can follow in the footsteps of Lincoln by visiting the places and learning about the people and events that helped shape the most admired President in American History!
