camping
in the national park system

Camping in the scenic and recreational units of the National Park System is a memorable experience enjoyed each year by many thousands of visitors. This booklet is intended to provide information about the fees, the facilities, and the recreational opportunities available at each park and campground. It has been prepared in this form to provide the camper with as much information as possible in order that he might enjoy a richer camping experience regardless of the type of camping equipment he is using. Camping in the National Park System permits the camper to enjoy those unique features or recreational opportunities which each area has to offer.

Reservations

Reservations cannot be made for those campsites which are operated by the National Park Service. Assignments are on a first-come, first-served basis. In certain instances, concessioner-operated recreation vehicle sites with utility connections may be reserved by direct contact with the concessioner. Organized groups can make advance reservations in areas which have special group camps.

Fees

A Federal Area Entrance Permit (annual "Golden Eagle Passport" or short term) is required for entrance to most areas of the National Park System. In addition, campground-use fees are required at many parks. All user fees are subject to change.

Recreation vehicles

Recreation vehicles are welcome in all parks and can be accommodated in most campgrounds; however, full utility connections are not usually provided. Sanitary (dumping) stations are available in some parks for the disposal of liquid wastes from recreation-vehicle holding tanks. In some units of the National Park System, recreation-vehicle campgrounds offering utility connections are operated by concessioners. These sites are available on a fee basis and are listed in the following pages.

Length of stay

The steadily increasing demand for campsites in the National Park System has made it necessary to limit the number of days a camper may occupy a site. The length-of-stay time has been established in relation to a reasonable number of days necessary for the enjoyment of those features which the area has to offer. This enables additional numbers of campers to use and enjoy the parks.

Because of personnel restrictions, the National Park Service has been forced to close or reduce operation of facilities in many areas when seasonal personnel are not available. Campers are advised to contact park superintendents in advance of their trips regarding the status of specific campgrounds they plan to use.

Wilderness camping

Many units of the National Park system contain true wilderness areas. In some of them, the self-sufficient camper may hike to a desert canyon or climb to a mountain lake where there are no facilities. This type of camping should not be attempted by the novice, for the end of the trail may be miles from water supply or human habitation. Since the dangers to the inexperienced or ill-equipped camper in such a venture are real and serious, it is necessary that the superintendent or a park ranger be informed of plans for such a trip and have the opportunity to inspect the camper's gear. In certain circumstances, such as high fire danger or probability of extreme weather, it may be required that the expedition be postponed until more favorable conditions prevail.

Information in advance

No matter which type of camping you are contemplating, you may write to the superintendents of the areas that you plan to visit, requesting full information on facilities available or possibilities for a wilderness trip, if that is your goal. When you arrive at the park, consult with a park ranger, who will answer your questions and attempt to make your stay enjoyable.

Equipment

If you plan to stay in an established campground, some items you may want are tent, air mattresses or cots, sleeping bags or blankets, ground cloth, gasoline lantern, gasoline stove, cook kit, eating utensils, camp icebox, flashlight, vacuum jug, and first-aid kit. For a wilderness camping trip, take a minimum of equipment, such as light-weight tent or tarp, sleeping bags, ground cloth, cook kit, canteen, flashlight, hatchet, shovel, and rope.

Fuel

While the National Park Service is genuinely sympathetic with the first love of the camper—the campfire—the shortage of wood in many areas, and air pollution resulting from too many campfires in other areas, poses a serious problem. Campers are encouraged to use charcoal or campstoves using bottled fuel for campfire cooking. The gathering of wood for use as fuel in campgrounds must be limited to dead material on the ground, except where such gathering is prohibited by the superintendent.

Outdoor programs

In many parks, interpretive programs, including nature walks, guided tours, and campfire talks, are conducted by park personnel. Other activities which campers may enjoy, such as swimming, boating, and fishing, are indicated in the campground listings on the following pages.

Regulations

For protection of natural features and for your comfort and safety, certain regulations have been established and are enforced.

Natural features. Every area of the National Park System is a museum of natural or human history; therefore, removal or destruction of any feature is not allowed. This also applies to manmade facilities.

Wildlife. Do not feed animals. Injuries to campers by bears or other animals are usually due to the campers' attempt to feed them. Observe them, but do not interfere with them. Food supplies should be locked up or hung out of reach.

Hunting is prohibited in National Parks, Monuments, and Historical areas of the National Park System. Regulations also prohibit the use of campgrounds as base camps for hunting outside these areas.

Fire. Confine your fire to fireplaces in established campgrounds and picnic areas. Before you retire for the night or leave your campsite unattended for any reason, make certain that your campfire is entirely out. Where required, wilderness campers must obtain a fire permit.

Trash. Keep your camp clean by placing all garbage and trash in containers provided. All combustible material should be burned in the fireplaces. In wilderness camps, incombustible trash—including cans—should be carried out or disposed of as directed.

Pets are allowed in the parks if on leash or otherwise under physical restraint.

Noise. Common courtesy is the rule. Avoid noise especially late at night and early in the morning.

Definitions of campground types

Campground (Type A). A campground area is classified as having well-defined roads, parking spaces, and campsites. Drinking water and sanitary facilities, including flush toilets and refuse cans, are furnished on a community basis. Each campground has a designed capacity based on the number of campsites therein.

A campground site, or campsite, is a clearly marked plot or location within a campground which provides accommodations for camping by an individual, family, or party. A typical campsite in a campground would include a parking space, fireplace, table and bench combination, and a tent space; however, in a walk-in campground or walk-in section of a campground, the parking space is provided but not as an integral part of each campsite.

Camping Area (Type B). A camping area is an area (other than a campground) designated and regularly used for camping by individuals, families, or parties. Camping areas may be accessible by either road or trail. Facilities provided are minimal, generally being limited to access roads, basic sanitary facilities, and a limited number of fireplaces and tables. Trail camps fall within this category, and shelters of the Adirondack or fully enclosed type may be provided. Each camping area has an assigned, as differentiated from designed, capacity based on the number of camping spaces therein. Superintendents assign to each camping area a capacity figure, in terms of camping spaces, based on a realistic evaluation of acreage involved, topography, facilities provided, and average camping party size.

A camping space in a camping area is one which is normally occupied by an individual, family, or party.

Group Camp (Type C). A group camp is an area designated for use by organized groups, such as Boy Scouts, school groups, or other large parties. It is composed of one or more group spaces, each of which is provided with a large fireplace, several tables, and parking space for buses or a number of cars. Capacity of group camps is rated on the basis of the number of group spaces within the camp and the number of persons each can normally accommodate.

America's natural resources

As the Nation's principal conservation agency, the Department of the Interior has basic responsibilities for water, fish, wildlife, mineral, land, park, and recreational resources. Indian and Territorial affairs are other major concerns of America's "Department of Natural Resources." The Department works to assure the wisest choice in managing all our resources so each will make its full contribution to a better United States—now and in the future.

The National Park System is dedicated to conserving, for the benefit and enjoyment of all the people, areas of national significance which contain exceptional scenic, scientific, historical, and recreational resources.
