GRAND CANYON ASSOCIATION
A park partner since 1932

Mountain Lions Are a Symbol of Wilderness

This powerful, secretive predator requires ample space and food to survive. Grand Canyon National Park offers what lions need, but lions and the many other natural residents of the canyon also need your help.

The national park is home to more than 300 species of birds, nearly 100 mammals, some 30 types of fish, several amphibians and more than 50 reptiles. This teeming ecosystem is delicately balanced. National Park Service wildlife biologists study the many species of the national park and the effects of human influences on the Grand Canyon ecosystem.

Adopt-a-Lion to Preserve and Protect Grand Canyon Wildlife

You can help preserve and protect all Grand Canyon wildlife. When you Adopt-a-Lion, you help protect the mountain lion, the park's largest predator and a critical part of the Grand Canyon ecosystem, while also supporting many other Grand Canyon animals, from Abert's squirrels to Grand Canyon rattlesnakes.

Grand Canyon Association Bookstores

There are two ways to Adopt-a-Lion:

- At a Grand Canyon Association bookstore, see a sales clerk for the enrollment form to make a donation and receive your plush lion or baseball cap immediately.
- Adopt-a-Lion online at www.grandcanyon.org.
