Dixie Loop Roads

Many of the primary refuge roads off CR 349 in Dixie County are named loop but do not return to their start. All mileages are one-way. For a 30-mile round-trip tour, park at one end and ride them all.

Yellow Jacket Loop—1.3 miles

Yellow Jacket follows a sandhill and is a dry scrub pine habitat that transitions to flatwoods at the south end of this hard-packed road.

Ride around refuge gates

Beaver Dam Road—2.7 miles

This shady, limerock road partly follows a stream. It is named for beavers who made the stream their home. However, a beaver has not been sighted for many years.

Weeks Landing—1.5 miles

A shady hard-packed road that has two gravel-lined swampy areas near the river. A canoe launch at the end features a view of Fowlers Bluff. Look for jumping Gulf sturgeon.

North Dead End—1.5 miles

A hard-packed, shady road with grassy verges and a grove of scrub oak.

North Dead End

Middle Loop—1.5 miles

This grassy road has two possibly wet gravel-lined places and one soft, sandy section. If you are traveling north to south, turn right at the unnamed fork as the road ahead dead-ends.

Triangle Loop Pond

Triangle Loop—1.5 miles

A large lily-studded pond anchors the north end of this curving limerock road. There is a short, gravel section that could be wet.

South Dead End—1 mile

Open pines define this trail that gradually becomes too swampy to ride. Take the left fork.

Gate 10 Road

1.5 miles

One of the least trafficked primary roads on the Levy County side of the Refuge, it is an easy and scenic ride.

Park near the beginning of Gate 10 Road. This live oak-canopied, hard-packed road ends at two large ponds. The secondary road beyond Gate 50 is impassable.

Turkey Foot

2.5 mile loop

This trail gets its name from three gates at the end of Pond 4 Road that form a 'turkey foot.' Wide and grassy, the trail is blazed yellow.

Start the trail at Gate 28. At the first fork look for long-leaf pines and wiregrass that were planted when the area was restored to native habitat in 2013. Turn right to Pond 5—one of many borrow pits dug prior to Refuge management when timber companies needed material to build roads.

Turkey Foot is a good area to spot birds, butterflies and wildflowers. Swallow-tailed kites are frequently seen during their spring breeding season.

Nature Drive

9 miles

The Nature Drive is the main road on the Levy County side of the Refuge. It is hardpacked limerock with light vehicle traffic and is one of the easiest rides in the Refuge.

Fewflower milkweed
Asclepias lanceolata

The north and south entrances are identified by brown road signs. This winding, scenic road is shady at the south end where it passes through maritime hammocks, swamps and marshes. It transitions to pine uplands farther north.

Tram Ridge

2.8 mile loop

Named for a tram road (railroad bed) that underpins many refuge roads including this one, the Tram Ridge Trail is a wide, frequently-mowed single-track.

Park in the River Trail parking lot off paved Headquarters Drive and follow signs to the Tram Ridge Trail. The trail is alternately sandy and grassy. Potentially wet areas are either graveled or have boardwalks. A scrub oak canopy shades much of the ride and benches dot the trail.

The 0.7-mile long River Trail Loop is accessed from the same parking lot and features a boardwalk to a viewing platform overlooking the lower Suwannee River.
