Petrified Forest

National Park National Park Service U.S. Department of the Interior

Bird Checklist

Birds, like other animals, need food, shelter and water to survive. Petrified Forest is a high desert environment with extreme temperature ranges and limited rainfall. How do birds adapt to Petrified Forest?

RESTDENTS

Designated by R on the checklist, these birds are found here for at least four months. Resident birds adapt to the high desert in surprising ways.

Birds have higher normal body temperatures than most animals. Their normal body temperatures are often around $104^{\circ}F$. They do not need to start cooling their bodies until the surrounding air temperature exceeds that of their bodies.

Some birds escape the heat by flying higher where the air is cooler.

Birds avoid daytime heat by limiting activity to cool, early morning and, to a lesser extent, late afternoon.

Feather position can either insulate or cool. Compressing feathers destroys their insulating value, while fluffing them traps body heat.

MIGRANTS

Designated by M on the checklist. Birds that do not find Petrified Forest suitable habitat for year-round residence are called migrants, and most of the birds on this checklist fall into this category. They are here twice a year on their north-south routes, when the climate and location are favorable.

OCCASIONALS

Designated by 0 on the checklist. Occasionals or accidentals are birds that have wandered from their normal range due to bad weather or inexperience. They are birds whose normal range is distant and which have been sighted less than twelve times outside that range.

WHERE WILL YOU FIND BIRDS IN PETRIFIED FOREST?

Birds are found near permanent or seasonal water, such as Puerco River and Lithodendron Wash; around trees, high shrubs, and sheltered cliff faces; areas of human habitation, man made oases, such as park housing, visitor service areas, picnic areas, and wayside fringes; roadsides on cold days where roadbeds are warm and birds are attracted by heat and food. All these areas offer sources of food, water and shelter necessary for desert survival.
