Imaginative playground equipment is possible if we but take the time to recognize that which would appeal to the youngsters coming to the playground for recreation. Surplus and scrap materials will often permit us to put our imagination to work as in this simulated covered wagon made of odds and ends. Horses can be cut from plywood—perhaps obtained from a discarded carousel or from a second-hand store, and repainted. They might also be formed of rods, covered with metal lath, and gunite treated. An appropriate color paint job gives realism.
