Canal Exploration Center.

A Story in Many Voices

It takes a thousand voices to tell a single story.
American Indian Proverb

The new Canal Exploration Center sheds light on a lesser-known chapter in American history, the Canal Era. It's a story of working people striving to realize the Founding Fathers' vision. Some prospered as businesses flourished along the watery interstate "highways" of the day. Immigrants and people of color struggled for work, greater freedom, and acceptance. Boats brought new consumer goods into the heartland and carried out raw materials. No longer reliant on homemade things, Americans became shoppers. During the Canal Era, the national identity and the national economy began to gel.

Come immerse yourself in the period between the country's Jubilee and Centennial years, 1825 - 1876. Through interactive maps and games, explore why a growing nation needed canals. Meet people who lived or worked along the Ohio & Erie Canal. Read a diary entry by a teenage canal worker. Listen to John Malvin, a free African American, recall his experiences as a canal boat captain. Try on a captain's frock coat or the simpler coat of a boatman. Decide whose money and whose opinion to trust.

What did the notion of progress mean to different people? Canals brought changes in immigration, jobs, communications, and home life. Step into the nineteenth-century pastime of debate as citizens express their feelings in speeches and newspapers. How much should taxpayers invest in public works projects? Who benefits? Questions like these remain relevant today.

This summer Canal Exploration Center is open daily from 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. Arrive aboard the Canal Explorer (page 6), visit on your own, or join a park ranger for an Evening Canal Stories Hike (page 14). Lend your voice to a new tale—what the Canal Era's legacy means to you.

3 - 5 Hiking & Recreation

Enjoy hiking series for different abilities, outdoor yoga, camping, and Canalway Questing.
