The posts forming the stockade being of pine - from 8 to 10 inches in diameter - about 30 feet long - 2 or 3 feet apart each is buried in the earth to ^{support} them upright. Was an additional support. pieces of scullings are pinned together on either side near the top & bottom - running the whole length - & from the upper row of them an occasional beam led to the ground forming a lateral support like B.

Nearly all the posts are now at least decayed at the bottom of the earth, and will soon require replacing by others.
Independent of this there is a Hospital near the River bank, also stockaded. a Cooper's shop, Boat House and several other out buildings about the premises. besides a small village of about 50 buildings, occupied by them.
