WATERTON LAKE DEVELOPMENT

Welcome to the United States section of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park where two nations have joined two National Parks in a symbol of lasting friendship. Although this is a non-administrative union, both parks work in harmonious relationships in keeping with their international character.

At the dedication of these beautiful new facilities, it is fitting that we recognize not only the completion of another long-range National Park Service project, but also commemorate the friendly relations that exist between the people of the United States and Canada.

The joint efforts of the Rotary Clubs of Montana and Alberta culminated in the establishment of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park on December 8, 1932 through action by the Canadian Parliament and the American Congress.

The project was constructed in 1965 during the International Cooperation Year as proclaimed by President Lyndon B. Johnson.

As you step off the launch at the Old Goat Haunt Landing, you are immediately aware of the close harmony that exists between the two parks and nations. Flanking the entranceway to the Exhibit Shelter are the Coat of Arms of Canada and the Great Seal of the United States, both intricately carved in bold relief. A freestanding panel greets one in the entranceway. It contains a carved symbolic olive branch and a welcome message.

The key exhibit tells the story of the vigorous action taken by Rotary International of both countries in creating the world's first International Peace Park.

Another exhibit locates and describes other international parks created since the original proposal by Rotary International.

Other exhibits are in keeping with the international theme: trails and scenic points in both parks, showing trails crossing the International Boundary; plants and animals, showing that ecological rather than political boundaries control them; glacial troughing of the Waterton Valley from south to north — how one glacier carved one valley in two nations; a final exhibit describes the Rocky Mountains as a single physiographic unit that spans two nations and provides a source of outstanding scenic values featured in the National Parks of the Rockies of both countries.

Other facilities in this project include a Ranger Station, Observation Deck, Boat Dock, Apartment House, Bunkhouse, Hikers' Shelters, Barn, and such miscellaneous items as a reservoir, water, sewer and electric systems, walks and paths and landscaping.
