DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Exterior: The front of Grand Canyon Station faces south. The roof of the building has three levels; two on an east-west axis, with a porch roof lower than the roof of the main building. The third level is on a north-south axis and crosses the main roof in the center. The main level and supports for the porch and overhangs of the upper stories are made of logs. The second story is a frame structure with shingles for the exterior wall. The words, "Grand Canyon" stand out from the exterior wall of the attic. The dispatcher's office, upper story, and attic walls all extend out slightly from the walls of the main level. A platform and tracks extend to the south in front of the building. A parking lot is on the west and Park Loop incircles the north and south sides. On the south end of the building, there is a small loading dock. On the west, under the porch roof, a small frame addition has been made of planks. A telephone booth is attached to the southwest corner of this small structure. The overall structure covers approximately 3,000 square feet.

Interior: The interior of the station is divided into two levels. Entrance may be gained on all sides of the main floor. The waiting room is in the southwest end of the building with entrances from the south and west. The rest of the station leads east from the waiting The agent's office is in the north portion of the building with access to both the waiting room and ticket office. The ticket office is directly east of the waiting room and the ticket window is in the adjoining wall. Entrance to the ticket office is gained through a south door and from the north through a small hallway which houses the staircase. The railway express and baggage and freight areas compose the east end of the building. The restrooms occupy the northeast and northwest corners with the agent's office, rear entrance and staircase in between. The interior walls of the station are plastered except for the small extension which is unfinished and the baggage and freight rooms which have wooden walls. The ticket office and waiting room have wood trim on the lower third of the walls. The floors are cement except for the freight room which has a wooden floor.

The only entrance to the upstairs apartment is by the staircase and rear entrance. The stairs lead into a small entranceway. The bathroom is to the left, the kitchen to the right, and living room straight ahead. The bedrooms are in the northeast and southeast corners with bathroom and closet space between. The living room is in the northwest corner with the kitchen leading off to the southwest. A small pantry and utility area are off to the west in the attic of the waiting room. The apartment walls are plastered and the floors are wood. The kitchen and bathroom have linoleum on the floors.

There are no furnishing in any part of the building; however, the cabinets and fixtures are still in place. The plaster in the apartment is beginning to chip and fall off, and several holes have been punched in the cement floor of the main level. The walls and floors of the addition on the west are almost completely unfinished. Many of the original door knobs are gone and a few of the exterior logs at ground level shown signs of rotting.
