A Day in the Life of a Soldier

Imagine yourself as a soldier at Fort Point. As a new recruit, you will spend many hours in drills marching in the windy parade ground, and keeping watch from the barbette tier at the top level of the fort. As a guardian of the Golden Gate, San Francisco's safety depends on you.

Stand tall as you enter through the sally port, our first line of defense. Notice the rifle slits in the sally port walls—these would spell doom for even the toughest of invaders.

Shake off the cold air when you are on lookout as a sentry guard. But if keeping warm is what you need, artillery practice on the cannons will do the trick! And not all fort duties are full of action. You must sweep the halls, clean your uniforms, and ensure the gunpowder is properly stored in the powder magazine.

Based on what you have learned, list three feelings or emotions a Fort Point soldier might have experienced and explain why you think this.

Interview a Ranger!

Find a ranger and ask them questions to learn about Fort Point. Asking questions is a great way to learn more!

Why was Fort Point built here?

Answer:

What do you do as a ranger?

Answer:

Why did you become a ranger?

Answer:

Have you ever seen a bear?

Answer:

How can I help protect national parks?

Answer:

Make your own question for the ranger. Write it here, along with the answer:

Answer:

Symbols are amazing things. One symbol can say so much!

The symbol of the National Park Service shows the things we protect for everyone in the parks.

The Bison represents all of the animals.

The Sequoia Tree represents all of the plants.

The Mountain represents all the scenic views.

The Water represents all the recreational opportunities.

And the Arrowhead represents the historical and cultural value of our national parks.

Arrowhead Art

Now it's your turn to create your own symbol with 3-5 things that represent you.
