Rancho Los Feliz: An Anza Expedition Legacy

The diseño (hand-drawn map) for El Pueblo la Reina de Los Angeles (Town of the Queen of Angels) is thought to be dated around the early 1800's. "Los Felices" refers to the area of Rancho Los Feliz; and "Los Berdugos" is correctly spelled as Los Verdugos. Credit: Donald C. Jose Vicente Féliz may be remembered best as the husband of Anza expedition member María Ygnacia Manuela Pinuelas who died in childbirth on November 24, 1775 and was buried at Mission San Xavier del Bac in Arizona today. The child, José Antonio, survived the trip, but died nine months later at Mission San Gabriel. Despite the personal loss of two family members within nine months, Vicente, the father of eight other children, returned as a soldier to southern California and later became a successful Californio. Rancho Los Féliz, a 6,647-acre grazing concession including the Los Angeles River, was confirmed between 1796 and 1800. Over 4,000 acres of the original Rancho Los Féliz are now known as Griffith Park in the City of Los Angeles. The story of Féliz is part of the continuing saga of southern California water. Here is a small part of the story . . .

While several of the 1776 Anza party left the Presidio of San Francisco to found the first pueblo in San José in 1777, José Vicente Féliz remained stationed at the presidio until 1781 when his military experience and his ability to read and write earned him a major assignment in settling El Pueblo de la Reina de Los Angeles (The Town of the Queen of the Angels). He returned to land and a Mediterranean climate more suited to his Sonoran roots and to places he had camped and ridden near the Los Angeles River. Féliz, three other soldiers, and the first of three settling parties arrived at Mission San Gabriel in June 1781 three months ahead of the pueblo's official founding along the Nuestra Señora de Los Angeles de Porciúncula (Our Lady of the Angels of the Little Portion or the Los Angeles River).

The pobladores (settlers), recruited from various places around the Gulf of California, were quarantined at the mission. On September 4, 1781, Corporal Féliz led the party of pobladores the final eight miles to the banks of the Rio Porciúncula. In a valley nestled between two mountain (Rancho Los Feliz, cont.) ranges admired on a previous expedition by Father Crespi, and at a site designated by Governor Felipe de Neve, the original Los Angeles was established (now CA Historical Landmark #156). Even in this small, remote, and dusty pueblo in 1781, the forces of destiny creating the new nation were on the move, just as they were 3,000 miles away in the thirteen colonies.

The original pueblo was four square leagues, a league being 5,000 varas or approximately 2.6 miles - what a person could walk comfortably in one hour - as shown on the pictured diseño. Included within the boundary was Yang-na, the community of Chumash living in tule huts.

In 1787, Corporal Feliz was appointed by Governor Pedro Fages to serve as Comisionado (governor's representative, but really the chief authority) of the new pueblo. He kept order and helped new settlers. As pueblo life assumed regularity, the balance of power shifted from military to civilian officials. Meanwhile, Feliz remarried, applied for and received (circa 1796-1800) a grazing concession on land contiguous and upstream of the pueblo, a rancho of about one and one-half square leagues (6,647 acres). Life outside the pueblo was considered dangerous, and the granting of land to a military soldier was considered a smart strategy.

Rancho Los Feliz, besides being the family name, was referred to in newspaper articles as "happy farm." The rancho was reported as among the loveliest and most profitable in Alta California and "surpassed the others in both scenery and agricultural potential." The rancho (today just east of Universal Studios, the Hollywood sign, Forest Lawn cemetery, among other features) included the eastern tip of the Santa Monica Mountain range where the spring-fed Los Angeles River turned 180-degrees to the south. Oak groves, ferns, and wild flowers were abundant. There were inexhaustible supplies of wood, water, and wildlife. Because of the rancho's location northwest of the young village and the proximity of the road to Santa Barbara, it was a center of activity and played an important part in the emerging life of the new town.

Feliz died in 1822 just before Mexico established independence from Spain and took over governance of California. His second wife became the land owner under Spanish law. She remarried a neighbor and became Dona Maria Ygnacia Feliz-Verdugo (Berdugo on the diseño) while still occupying Rancho Feliz.

As an astute business woman, she registered the Rancho Los Feliz cattle brand. Meanwhile, the missions were secularized and, in 1835, Los Angeles was decreed the capital of Alta

California, although the capital did not physically move from Monterey until 1845. During the politically unstable Mexican regime (perhaps because Feliz was of Spanish descent and possibly because they were Spanish loyalists), the family took strong action to ensure and defend their legal rights. In 1839, Dona Feliz-Verdugo secured the Rancho's water rights. In 1841 and again in 1845 her petitions for title to the land were successfully reconfirmed. After California was admitted to the Union, Rancho Los Feliz water rights were confirmed by the U. S. Patent Office.

In 1853, just before she died, Dona Feliz-Verdugo deeded over portions of the rancho to her daughters. They, in turn, sold their land entitlements for $1 an acre to the family attorney, Antonio Coronel. The remaining acres went to Feliz-Verdugo's son, Antonio Feliz. With continuing droughts affecting the entire cattle economy and mounting expenses to defend land and water entitlements, Feliz was forced to take action. On his deathbed in 1863, the remaining acres of Rancho Feliz were transferred to the lawyer Antonio Colonel, presumably in payment for legal fees.

The land was resold several times for many different reasons. In 1868 the water rights were leased by the down-stream City of Los Angeles. Nearly twenty years later, in 1885 the new owner, Griffith J. Griffith, sold the water rights to the City for $50,000 with the knowledge that they were much more valuable. As a visionary, Griffith, understanding the value of the land as a natural resource for the growing community, offered to sell it for $750 an acre. All the value of the land was based on its accessible water. The City wasn't interested in his offer. Griffith eventually donated over 3,015 acres to Los Angeles for its first park. Until the property was annexed into the City in the early 1900's, the Los Angeles River supplied all the city's water needs.

Viva Rancho Los Feliz!

A Centennial Update

Griffith Park celebrated its 100th anniversary in 1996. As part of the year-long festivities, a plaque was dedicated to honor the Anza party expedition and campsite near Travel Town. Among Griffith Park's many attractions is the 1853 Feliz Adobe (City Landmark #401). Located in the eastern end of the Santa Monica Mountains and surrounded by nearly 14 million regional residents with three major freeways defining its northeastern boundary, residents and visitors have loved it to death! Nearly 10 million people used the park in its centennial year. And in November of that year, two separate bond issues passed (Proposition A and Proposition K), with $45 million designated for Griffith Park improvements. Additional Proposition A funds will be used to enhance the route of the Juan Bautista de Anza National Historic Trail along the Los Angeles River with greenways, pocket parks, and youth educational and work programs. †

Challenge Cost-Share Program

Congratulations to the four successful applicants for 1997 Challenge Cost Share Program (CCSP) funds. The East Bay Regional Park District will design, construct, and install interpretive signs and markers along twenty miles of the Anza Trail from Willow Pass to Oakley adjacent to the Highway 4 corridor in Contra Costa County, California.

Henry W. Coe State Park in Santa Clara County, California will install an interpretive panel telling the story of Anza in a display case at the Anza trailhead within the park.

Southwest Parks and Monuments Association will produce and distribute 1600 Spanish translations of the Juan Bautista de Anza National Historic Trail, a 16-page booklet, currently only in English.

NorthEast Trees, a non-profit tree-planting organization in Los Angeles, will design, construct, and place an interpretive sign at the Sunnybrook pedestrian bridge across the Los Angeles River at Griffith Park along the historic Anza route.

CCSP funds are generally made available annually by Congress. CCSP can

Agencies Start Trail Marking

The National Park Service is actively working with federal and state agencies to mark and interpret the Anza Trail. The following activities are going on:

- The Presidio of San Francisco is developing plans to use the official marker on the historic route from Mountain Lake to the bluffs above the Golden Gate where Anza determined the location of the Presidio. Six interpretive displays will be installed along the trail. Other points of interest, including the remains of the original Spanish presidio, will be interpreted and shown on a park map. For the past six years, presidio staff have offered a tour along the route called "Walking in the Footsteps of Anza."
- John Muir National Historic Site is preparing a site bulletin to interpret the Anza expedition at the Martinez Adobe.
- Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area will mark the trail as soon as its Comprehensive Design Plan for Simi Hills is approved and the trail alignment determined.
- Staff at Camp Roberts in Monterey County, California have proposed to mark an approximate eight-mile portion of the Anza route. Although some of the trail is within an impact zone which cannot be entered, much of the route travels through an oak-savannah landscape nearly the same as the expedition would have encountered. Individuals or groups can make arrangements to tour the trail and to use the facilities or camp when training maneuvers are not being conducted. Call Albert Davis at the Historical Museum at Camp Roberts at (805)238-3732 or Brian Duke at (805) 238-8418.
- The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) is coordinating between its four districts involved with the Anza Trail: Maricopa, Yuma, El Centro, and Fort Ord Public Lands. Cheryl Blanchard, BLM archeologist, received a $9,000 BLM grant to mark and interpret twenty miles of the Anza Trail between Highway 85 and Mobile in Maricopa County, Arizona. This nearly pristine area receives many visitors especially celebrating the Mormon Battalion or following the Butterfield Overland Mail Route, with which the Anza Trail is contiguous. Marking the Anza Trail will bring the Spanish history of the trail to the public.
- The NPS and California State Department of Parks and Recreation signed a draft memorandum of understanding (MOU) to certify the 23 parks through which the Anza Trail is routed. Henry W. Coe State Park and Anza-Borrego Desert State Park have already marked their trail segments with the official marker.

fund up to 50 percent of a project, provided that a nonfederal partner matches or betters the contribution. Partner matches may be in cash, volunteer hours, or in-kind services. In 1997, the entire five-state Pacific West Region of the National Park Service received just $55,000 in CCSP funds for national historic, scenic, or recreational trails, so the process was highly competitive. +

by Nancy DuPont

The 1996 Commemorative Relay of the Juan Bautista de Anza National Historic Trail (NHT) came to a successful conclusion on December 8, 1996 in Antioch, California, at Bridgehead Park, Contra Costa County, Anza's campsite #101. On November 30, at the Presidio of San Francisco, 97 horseback riders, most in period costume, had delivered a message from the Mayor of Hermosillo, Mexico, to the mayor of San Francisco. Superintendent Brian O'Neill presented a Special Commendation to Heritage Trails Fund, Amigos de Anza, for its vision and perseverance in conducting the 1996 Anza Trail Commemorative Relay.

The message and other proclamations were carried in a mochila (saddlebag) transferred from rider to rider along the 1263-mile route during the 53-day event. In another symbolic gesture, water from the San Miguel River in Hermosillo was carried by relay participants and poured into San Francisco Bay to signify the blending of cultures.

Although Anza's path through Mexico is not part of the NHT as established by Congress, we began the reenactment of his journey on October 12 in Hermosillo to emphasize the cross-cultural aspects of Anza's legacy. Heritage Trails Fund sponsored the ride, with National Park Service help, to celebrate the 220th anniversary of Anza's journey and draw public attention to the Anza Trail. The relay was an official event of the California State Sesquicentennial. It was conducted by equestrians and bicyclists, runners and walkers, even a kayaker, who took on sections of the trail that pass through their communities. I followed the entire relay, riding over half of it on horseback.

We accumulated many new friends and 427 new members of Amigos de Anza. We reached some 5000 school children in Mexico, Arizona and California with a living history message about Anza. Over 2500 Relay participants assisted us in 61 events in the two countries, two states and 19 counties. We received proclamations from every city, county or park official at each of these events. Fourteen church leaders blessed us and four Indian tribes smudged us with accompanying prayers. Over 200 organizations were identified as supporters of the trail, and they logged 30,000 hours of volunteer service. We visited 83 parks and special places where 17,000 spectators joined us throughout the length of the trail. We were covered by 47 newspapers, seven television stations, two radio stations, and two videotape documentation's. The value of in-kind donations was $66,528.

Did we heighten the awareness of the trail? You bet we did! But the momentum cannot stop here. This is a beginning, a good foundation. We must plan for the events of the year 2000. It takes time, money, and dedication. On the relay we asked you to rise to the occasion, and you did. The next steps may be the hardest yet - the serious business of growing. +

Students Connect with History

On November 13, 1996, 21 students from Carpinteria Middle School participated in the Commemorative Relay by carrying the flasks of water brigade-fashion through the streets of Carpinteria. To be chosen, the students were asked to explain why they would like to participate in the relay. Here are a few responses.

"Throughout my life, I have always wanted to be a part of history. I believe helping carry the water of the Sonora River to the San Francisco Bay would help fulfill my goal. This historical journey is an educational reminder of our roots and history in California."

— Chris Gocong

"I would very much like to be in this reenactment of history because I think that to be a good citizen it is important to know about how your community got to be the way it is."

— Rebekah Ernst

"It would be fun to participate because then it could be one of those stories that you tell your grandchildren and something that you would feel really proud about."

— Oriana Grubisic

"I feel that the Spanish were very courageous and this relay gives them the recognition that they deserve and I would like to acknowledge them."

Anza Plaza Project Takes Shape

*Editors note:
The following article by Richard Williams,
President of the Anza Trail Coalition of Arizona, demonstrates how grassroots support and seemingly small

It started with an idea from two Tubac citizens and has grown into a reality involving many organizations, citizens, and business owners in Tubac. Ovelia Owen and Leila Pearsall felt that the area adjacent to Tubac Presidio State Historic Park [Anza's home and the staging area for the 1775-76 expedition] and St. Ann's Church would be an appropriate site for a plaza to commemorate Juan Bautista de Anza, his life and travels. Since the site lies on the Anza Trail, the Anza Trail Coalition of Arizona formed a steering committee made up of representatives from 16 local organizations. Starting with bake sales, aluminum can collection, and private donations, the committee raised over $4,000 including a grant with the Arizona Commission on the Arts matched by $1,000 from the County Board of Supervisors, and $900 from the White Elephant, a nonprofit charity organization.

With this start-up money, the committee hired a design consultant. During six months time, which included three public workshops and nine steering committee meetings, the consultant developed a master plan for this major interpretive site on the national trail. Included in the Coalition contract with the design consultant was the important provision that the master plan must include estimated dollar amounts to construct the project and sources of funding for construction, allowing a smooth transition to phase II.

Phase II of the project is now underway with development of the engineering drawings. Initially, $5,000 is being raised to cover the cost of the engineering consultant. We have a commitment for $1,000 from a local developer, Morning Star Ranch, and the County Board of Supervisors has submitted a $2,500 amount in this year's budget. An additional $900 is committed from a local western organization, so we are not far short of Phase II funding. The steering committee is now looking for grants to cover the estimated $350,000 for construction.+

Rio Rico Properties to Donate Trail Easement to Coalition

By Richard Williams

Rio Rico Properties recently agreed to donate approximately 14 miles of trail easement along the Santa Cruz River to the Anza Trail Coalition of Arizona. A ten-foot wide easement is proposed. The hiking and equestrian trail will border the river from Ruby Road in the south nearly to Santa Gertrudis Lane in the north, just one-half mile short of linking up with the 4.6 mile section of trail from Tumacácori to Tubac. With over 68 species of birds frequenting the river corridor during the spring and fall migratory seasons, we expect the trail will be a bird-watcher's delight.

Easement donation is contingent on the Coalition providing liability coverage which the county has agreed to pay for the coalition. A Geographic Positioning System (GPS) survey will locate the trail and enable a claim investigator to pinpoint the exact relation to the trail where the incident happened.

The Santa Cruz County management committee of the Coalition has the goal of reestablishing the historic route of the Anza Trail within the county by the year 2000.+

Pima County Promotes the Anza Trail

A diverse group of dedicated individuals in Pima County is doing wonders for the Anza Trail. Key players are the County Analyst for Trails and Open Space, Steve Anderson; the county Archeology and Historic Preservation Officer, Linda Mayro; the county Anza Trail Coalition Chair, Nancy Kelly; a local activist, Jim DiGiacomo; and the Green Valley News editor, Kathy Engle.

In May, 1997, Pima County voters passed a $36.3 million bond issue for open space, historic preservation, and trails. Of that, $750,000 are specified for the Anza Trail, covering 60

(Pima County, continued) miles of corridor acquisition and the four Anza campsites within the county. In addition, $100,000 for the Anza Trail is included in the County Parks and Recreation Department budget.

In the past year, the county has executed a one and one-half mile trail easement agreement along the Santa Cruz River at the Torres Blancas Golf Course; acquired in fee simple a one-mile fifty-foot wide trail corridor along the river through the Santa Rita Springs development of Dorn and Associates; and is acquiring an important Santa Cruz River crossing from the Green Valley Food Bank. In addition, Fairfield Development, owners of the Canoa Ranch are committed to protecting 4.5 miles of the Anza Trail within their development which is in the specific plan stage.

Further downstream, Coventry Homes in the town of Marana, north of Tucson, has requested certification to mark and interpret 1.25 miles of trail. †

Second Annual Anza World Conference in Arizpe

by Don Garate, Interpretive Specialist, Tumacacori NHP

The second annual Anza World Conference held in Arizpe, Sonora, from May 15-18, 1997, was attended by students of Anza from Arizona, California, Colorado, New Mexico in the U.S., Sinaloa and Sonora in Mexico, and Spain. Providing the highlight of this year's conference, six members of the Ansa family from Hernani (Gipuzkoa, Spain), birthplace of Juan Bautista de Anza, senior, attended. They included Ramón Ansa, who organized the group from Spain, and his wife, Josefa Eseiza; José Luis Ansa and his wife, Loli Mendizabal; and cousins Victoriano Ansa and María Lizeaga Ansa.

(A note about spelling: Our hero, Juan Bautista de Anza, the second, is the only person in his family who spelled the name with a "z." His father, Juan Bautista de Anza, senior, spelled it "Anssa." His grandfather, Antonio de Anza, spelled it "Ansa" about two thirds of the time and "Anssa" the other third. We have standardized the spelling to "Anza" in this country in this century. However, the family, of which there are many still residing in Spain, spell the name "Ansa.")

Papers were presented on the Arizpe Cathedral, the Juan Bautista de Anza National Historic Trail, and Anza in New Mexico.

Field trips were taken to Nuestra Señora de Aranzazu de Tetuachi and San José de Basochuca, former homes of Juan Bautista de Anza as he was growing up. On Sunday, everyone had the opportunity to attend Mass in the Arizpe Cathedral where Anza is buried. Prehistoric Indian writings in the Cajón de Jiésari were visited on the way back to Tucson. Two vans went via Fronteras to visit the old presidio site where Anza was born. †

Web Page Prepared by Volunteers

Jeannie Gillen, Riverside County Amigos de Anza Chair, figured a way to make all of her volunteer hours on the Commemorative relay and other Anza activities pay off for her and for the trail. For college credit, she became the client of a multi-media class at Mt. San Jacinto College. Jeannie literally provided a wagon load of information, and the class used it to create a web page, under Jeannie's guidance, which you can access at <http://www.msjcnewmedia.com/anza/>.+
