COURTEOUS guides make regular trips through the Caves at 9 and 10 a. m., at 1 and 3:30 p. m., and at other hours between 8 a. m. and 4 p. m., when a sufficient number of visitors for a usual party is at hand. A party, under one guide, is not permitted to exceed 16 people. Regular guide service commences May 15 and closes October 15. After June 15 and until September 1 a regular trip will also be made at 7 p. m. Special guide service by arrangement.

The route of the trip through the Oregon Caves has been fully explored and traversed by more than 110,000 people without a single accident. The walls of these Caves are of solid marble rock and have stood unchanged for ages.

In song and story around this campfire each evening jolly parties gather.

The sportsman will find delight in the trout fishing streams of the Oregon Cave vicinity.

At the Caves is a headquarters building of Swiss architecture, with dining room and kitchen in charge of members of the home economics department of the Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Oregon. A building in charge of an agreeable and competent lady has been provided for children too small for the Cave trip. This building was planned attractive to little folks, and you may find that they are not willing to leave when you are ready to depart.

Cottages and tent houses are furnished with high-grade beds. Hot and cold spring water is piped to each cottage and each has private bath and toilet. Electric lights within the buildings, and tent houses, also about the grounds. A huge campfire for those who enjoy the evening with song and story is a regular evening feature. Those who spend evenings at the Oregon Caves among the big pines, will long remember it as a land of enchantment.

A Work of Nature's Artists

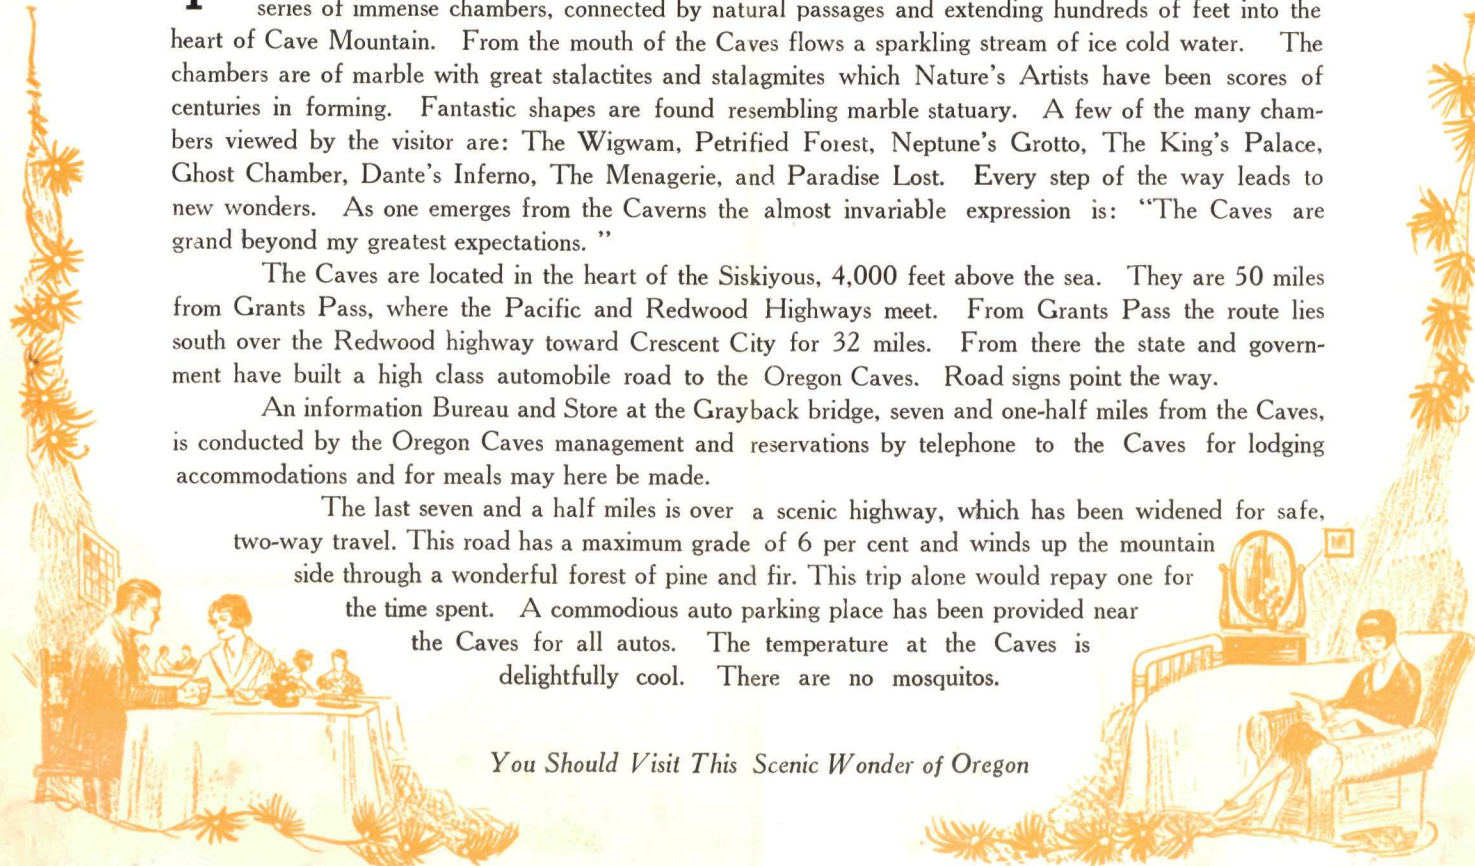

THE OREGON CAVES or "Marble Halls of Oregon," as they are sometimes called, comprise a series of immense chambers, connected by natural passages and extending hundreds of feet into the heart of Cave Mountain. From the mouth of the Caves flows a sparkling stream of ice cold water. The chambers are of marble with great stalactites and stalagmites which Nature's Artists have been scores of centuries in forming. Fantastic shapes are found resembling marble statuary. A few of the many chambers viewed by the visitor are: The Wigwam, Petrified Forest, Neptune's Grotto, The King's Palace, Ghost Chamber, Dante's Inferno, The Menagerie, and Paradise Lost. Every step of the way leads to new wonders. As one emerges from the Caverns the almost invariable expression is: "The Caves are grand beyond my greatest expectations."

The Caves are located in the heart of the Siskiyou, 4,000 feet above the sea. They are 50 miles from Grants Pass, where the Pacific and Redwood Highways meet. From Grants Pass the route lies south over the Redwood highway toward Crescent City for 32 miles. From there the state and government have built a high class automobile road to the Oregon Caves. Road signs point the way.

An information Bureau and Store at the Grayback bridge, seven and one-half miles from the Caves, is conducted by the Oregon Caves management and reservations by telephone to the Caves for lodging accommodations and for meals may here be made.

The last seven and a half miles is over a scenic highway, which has been widened for safe, two-way travel. This road has a maximum grade of 6 per cent and winds up the mountain side through a wonderful forest of pine and fir. This trip alone would repay one for the time spent. A commodious auto parking place has been provided near the Caves for all autos. The temperature at the Caves is delightfully cool. There are no mosquitos.
