Narrative Description (Describe the historic and current condition of the property on one or more continuation sheets.)

Civilian Conservation Corps workers built the three-sided Alexander Lake Shelter Cabin in the Adirondack style. The cabin has a peeled log superstructure and shake walls and roof.

The structure is well-maintained, and its current appearance matches its original appearance. The sill logs on the two short sides have been replaced and are beginning to rot again; the back sill log has been replaced and is in good shape. Wall shakes are thirty inches long and abut vertically. All of the roof and wall shakes were replaced about 1980, and the bottom row of wall shakes was replaced within the last couple of years. The roof has several new cedar purlins. The front of the shelter does not have shakes protecting the ends of the horizontal poles that were used as nailers for the wall shakes, but two trail signs are nailed to the poles.

The natural context of the shelter cabin is similar to the 1930s. Visitors have a placid view of Alexander Lake from the cabin.

8. Significance (continued)

Narrative Statement of Significance (Explain the significance of the property on one or more continuation sheets.)

The Alexander Lake Shelter Cabin is a three-sided Adirondack style shelter built by the Civilian Conservation Corps on the Admiralty Island Canoe Route in 1935. The natural environment surrounding the cabin is unchanged from the 1930s. Since its construction, the shelter cabin has been maintained with materials similar to the original.
