Narrative Description (Describe the historic and current condition of the property on one or more continuation sheets.)

Civilian Conservation Corps workers built the Mitchell Bay shelter cabin during the 1930s. It is a three-sided Adirondack style shelter. It has a peeled log superstructure and shake walls and roof.

The cabin visually looks like the original. The sill logs have been recently replaced. The bottoms of the posts show where old nails have been removed to replace the sill logs. The bottom of one post was cut off and replaced with a short log round. At least one lintel log has been replaced. The wall shakes are thirty inches long and abut vertically. None of the roof or wall shakes is original. The front of the shelter has a single set of shakes protecting the ends of the horizontal poles used as nailers for the wall shakes. The U.S. Forest Service recently installed a painted box to hold a visitors' register.

The natural setting is similar to what it was during the 1930s. The shelter cabin overlooks a tidal flat that extends into Mitchell Bay.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Explain the significance of the property on one or more continuation sheets.)

The Mitchell Bay Shelter Cabin is a three-sided Adirondack style shelter built during the 1930s by the Civilian Conservation Corps as part of the Admiralty Island Canoe Route. It is a good example of the three-sided Adirondack style shelter cabin built for public recreation during the 1930s. The cabin has been maintained with materials similar to those used originally and the setting has not changed since the cabin's construction.
