Narrative Description (Describe the historic and current condition of the property on one or more continuation sheets.)

Civilian Conservation Corps workers built the Mole Harbor Shelter Cabin in the Adirondack style as a three-sided shelter along the Admiralty Island canoe route. It has a peeled log superstructure and shake walls and roof.

The structure is well-maintained, and its current appearance is similar to its original appearance. The sill logs on the two short sides have been recently replaced; the back sill log is rotten and has allowed moisture to seep up the bottoms of the posts, staining and weathering the bottom ten inches or so. Wall shakes are thirty inches long and abut vertically. None of the roof or wall shakes is original. The front of the shelter has a single set of shakes protecting the ends of the horizontal poles used as nailers for the wall shakes. A painted box has been recently installed by the U.S. Forest Service to hold a visitors' register.

The natural context is unchanged from the original, with a pleasant tidal flat extending into Mole Harbor, and a minor salmon stream entering it just a few dozen feet from the cabin.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Explain the significance of the property on one or more continuation sheets.)

The Mole Harbor Shelter Cabin is a three-sided Adirondack shelter built in the mid-1930s by Civilian Conservation Corps workers on the Admiralty Island Canoe Route. It is a good example of a shelter built for public recreation during the 1930s. The natural environment is unchanged from when the structure was built, and the shelter cabin has been maintained using original types of materials to retain its architectural integrity.
