This timetable is approximate. The trip may be done in less time, but allowances have been made for rest stops, picture taking, and slow hikers.

Track your progress by recognizing side canyons and landmarks. Deep Creek, Kolob Creek, and Big Springs are all fairly obvious, but watch closely for the mouth of Goose Creek--it can be easy to miss.

Hiking the Zion Narrows has inherent risks and you assume complete responsibility for the safety of all members of your group.

The National Park Service does not assume responsibility for information accuracy, precision, or completeness of data as displayed on this map.

Flash Floods

The Narrows are potentially hazardous.

Know the weather and flash flood potential forecasts before starting your trip. If bad weather threatens, do not enter a narrow canyon. Your decisions and actions regarding your safety are your responsibility.

Watch for these indications of a possible flash flood:

- Any deterioration in weather conditions
- Build up of clouds or sounds of thunder
- Sudden changes in water clarity from clear to muddy
- Floating debris
- Rising water levels or stronger currents
- Increasing roar of water up canyon

If you observe any of these signs, seek higher ground immediately. Even climbing a few feet may save your life. Remain on high ground until conditions improve. Water levels usually drop within 24 hours. Flash floods do occur in the park during periods of low flash flood potential. A moderate or higher flash flood potential should be a serious cause for concern.

Campsite Descriptions

1. Deep Creek

At the confluence of Deep Creek. The site is located on the left side of the river.
