

Lincoln and Johnson Reuniting North and South

Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson were elected President and Vice-President in 1864. This previously unheard of combination—a Republican and Democrat running together on the same ticket—was called the National Union Party. It represented both the North and South and symbolically reunited the two sides of the country after the Civil War.

To learn more, visit: www.nps.gov/anjo

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE