DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The De Soto National Memorial commemorates the landing of Hernando De Soto in Florida in 1539. Locally called Shaw's Point, it was established by the United States De Soto Expedition Commission in 1939 as the general area in which De Soto disembarked. In 1948, the National Park Service acquired 30 acres of Shaw's Point to establish the De Soto National Memorial.

Although there is no agreement among reputable historians that the Point was the actual landfall of the De Soto expedition, it is generally accepted that Shaw's Point, situated at the mouth of the Manatee River, would have been a convenient landing place. De Soto himself made no reference to the landing point, but went on to describe the immediate wooded area as swampy and thick with vast and lofty forests.

Presently, the De Soto National Memorial encompasses 30 acres of landscaped area and tidal mangrove swamp. The swamp does not contain a "virgin" mangrove growth of 400+ years of replenishment; almost all growth is only 31-36 years old or less. The water's edge is naturally buttressed with different types of surface materials and a ridge of deposit shell atop the beach face.

Located within the Memorial are remnants of shell mounds and walkways, apparently left by groups of Indians during the period of approximately 400 AD to 1700 AD. Also within the park, a "tabby house" was built in 1843 by William Shaw, one of the first settlers in Manatee County. The house fell into ruin after Shaw moved away in 1856. It was excavated in 1964 and remains an archaeological site.

In 1939, the Colonial Dames of America erected a commemorative marker to De Soto on an acre of land near what is now the parking lot. Since its establishment as a National Memorial in 1948, the National Park Service has installed administrative, interpretive, and maintenance facilities all of which are currently in excellent condition.

Approximately 4 acres containing the parking area, residence, maintenance area and landscaping are composed of modern fill dredged from the Mantee River in the mid 1950's. The remainder of the area is in its natural state.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The De Soto National Memorial commemorates the landing of the De Soto expedition in Florida in 1539 and the first extensive organized exploration of the interior of the southeastern part of the United States. However, the Memorial or Shaw's Point cannot be administered as a historic site with respect to the De Soto journey because of the disagreement among historians as to the exact location of De Soto's landfall. But, it is generally accepted that he landed in the vicinity of Tampa Bay.

After their disembarkment, the Spanish began their march through 4000 miles of unknown land. They penetrated as far north as present Tennessee and as far west as Texas. De Soto died in 1542 and was buried in the Mississippi River. The remnants of the expedition built ships at the confluence of the Arkansas and Mississippi Rivers where they were set afloat in the spring floods of 1543. They sailed into the Gulf to civilized Mexico.
