Scenic Drives

THE OUTSTANDING SCENIC DRIVES in the park and environs are:

● The Newfound Gap Highway connecting Gatlinburg on the Tennessee side with Cherokee on the North Carolina side. The number of this route is 71 on the Tennessee side, and 107 on the North Carolina side. The route attains an altitude of 5,053 feet at the state line.

● From Newfound Gap a side trip may be taken to the summit of Clingman's Dome over a fine paved highway which follows the ridge of the Smokies for about 7 miles. The summit of Clingman's Dome affords glimpses of what are probably the most spectacular scenic views in the park. This road, across the backbone of the Smokies, is well engineered and easily traveled.

● Another scenic drive in the park is from Kinzel Springs, Tenn., into Cades Cove. The road is well maintained within the park, but is not recommended for those unfamiliar with mountain driving. It is narrow, winding and, in spots, there is hardly enough room for passing other vehicles.

● In addition to the roads within the park boundary, there are other scenic drives in the territory embraced by this map, the chief of which are:

● U. S. 129 which connects Maryville, Tenn., and Topton, N. C. This route features several huge power dams and reservoirs. There are a number of spectacular views, and although mountainous, the road should not trouble any except drivers not familiar with mountain driving.

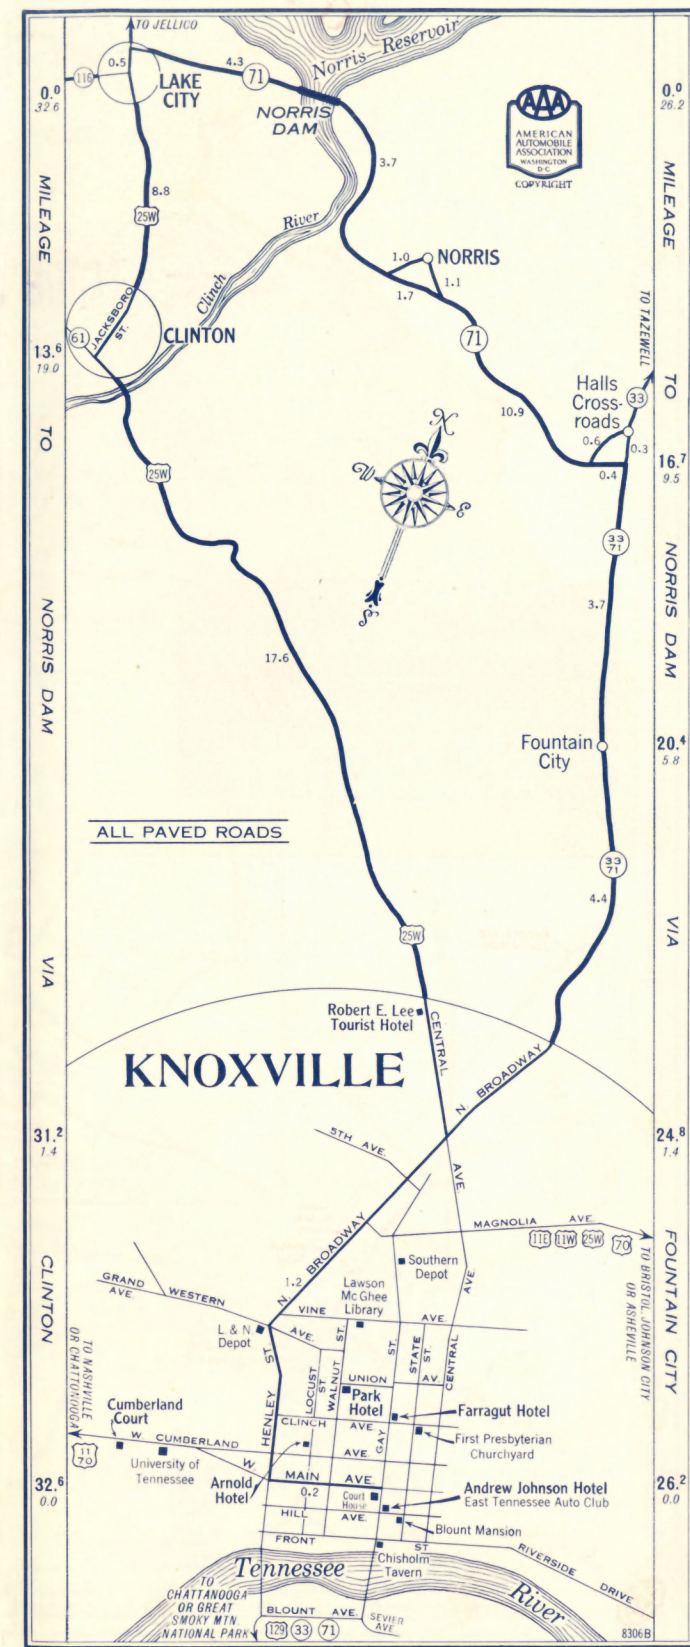

● U. S. 19 between Topton and Bryson City. North of Nantahala this route runs through Nantahala Gorge, one of the most magnificent gorges in the East, 8 miles long.

● U. S. 64 connecting Franklin and Brevard, via Highlands. This is a scenic drive featuring many beautiful waterfalls.

● State 73 connecting Gatlinburg and Maryville, a scenic and picturesque drive.

● From Franklin to Nantahala over a National Forest road via Kyle, with the spectacular Winding Stairs, near Nantahala. One should include the side trip to the summit of Wayah Bald, from which there is one of the finest views in this area.

● The road from Asheville through Candler to Mt. Pisgah is a picturesque drive.

PRINCIPAL ATTRACTIONS

GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

THIS PARK is divided about equally between North Carolina and Tennessee, the boundaries being within 35 miles of Knoxville and within 50 miles of Asheville. Containing over 500,000 acres, it is the eighth park in size in the country. It is 54 miles long and from 9 to 19 miles wide.

The Great Smoky Mountains, the most massive mountain uplift in the East, run the entire length of the park. The name comes from the blue haze, sometimes as dense as smoke, which almost always hangs over the mountain peaks. With the exception of Mount Mitchell, the highest peaks in eastern North America are included in the park area. Sixteen peaks are over 6,000 feet in elevation, and the main ridge does not drop below 5,000 feet for a distance of 36 miles. Most conspicuous are Clingman's Dome, 6,642 feet; Mount Guyot, 6,621 feet; Mount LeConte, 6,593 feet; Mount Kephart, 6,150 feet; Mount Chapman, 6,430 feet; Siler's Bald, 5,620 feet; Andrews Bald, 5,860 feet; Mount Mingus, 5,700 feet; Thunderhead, 5,530 feet; Gregory Bald, 4,948 feet; and Mount Collins, 6,188 feet.

More than 200,000 acres is virgin forest. The largest and finest stand of native deciduous trees remaining in the United States, and the largest virgin forest of red spruce are in this area. Much of the remainder is a very fine second growth which, in time, will closely approximate virgin forest conditions.

There are few places in the United States where plant life is so diversified. There are 130 varieties of native trees alone. The highest mountains are covered with dense forest usually consisting of spruce and balsam. Mountains of intermediate height are covered with hardwood growths. Other mountain tops are covered only with grass and are known locally as "balds."

The mountain streams are bordered with rhododendrons and laurel, and in certain areas, such as on Gregory Bald, the flame azalea grows in profusion. The bold mountain summits and knife-like ridges have a dense covering of rhododendron and sand myrtle. The displays of rhododendron and mountain laurel in June are perhaps the most magnificent in the country.

There are 600 miles of ideal trout streams in the park. Persons desiring to fish must secure a North Carolina or Tennessee state license, or both, if they wish to fish on both sides of the park. The annual non-resident license in North Carolina is $6.10 and in Tennessee, $5. Certain of the streams have been closed for restocking purposes. Such streams are plainly marked by signs. The trout fishing season begins about May 16 and lasts through August.

As in all the national parks, hunting is prohibited. Deer are now rare, but many bears, wildcats and smaller animals, and some ruffed grouse and wild turkeys remain.

There are 56 miles of high standard roads, nearly 50 miles of secondary roads and 675 miles of horse and foot trails. This park is a paradise for hikers.

About 18,000 acres in the northeastern half of the Great Smokies have been set aside as a wilderness area. Just enough trails for fire protection will be built, but hikers who want to get away from the beaten paths will be welcome to use these trails.

The park is open all year. Headquarters of the superintendent are in the Administration Building, 2 miles south of Gatlinburg, Tenn. Two modern campgrounds have been established, one at the Chimneys on the Tennessee side of Newfound Gap, and the other at Smokemont on the North Carolina side. In addition, there are temporary primitive campgrounds at Cades Cove, Cosby, Greenbrier, Cataloochee, Big Creek and Deep Creek. A permit is required to camp elsewhere in the park.

Pack outfits, saddle horses, guides, etc., may be obtained from the hotels in Gatlinburg, Tenn., from Cataloochee Ranch near Cove Creek, or from hotels in Bryson City, N. C. For those who do not wish to drive their own cars through the mountains, the trips conducted by the Smoky Mountain Tours Co., 51 Arcade Building, Asheville, are suggested.

A list of recommended AAA accommodations in the park area and in near-by cities will be found elsewhere in this folder. There is no entrance fee to the park and no charge for parking or use of the camping grounds.

THE ENVIRONS

North Carolina Side

Asheville (pop. 51,310) is one of the most famous mountain resorts of the East. A splendid highway leads from Asheville to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and to many other scenic points in the vicinity.

In addition to being a health and pleasure resort, Asheville is the home of a number of manufacturing enterprises. Of the greatest interest are the native industries, including the weaving of homespun woolen cloth, silver working and pottery making. Biltmore Junior College, St. Genevieve of the Pines Junior College and Asheville School for Boys are located here.

Points of interest include: the Tobacco Market; Biltmore House and Estate with its magnificent art collection; the Municipal Recreation Park; Beaucatcher Mountain, reached by scenic Beaucatcher Road; the toll road (cars 50c to 75c) up Sunset Mountain; the Spivey Mountain Tour to the summit of Mount Spivey; Bent Creek Experimental Forest, 6 miles southwest; the Craggy Gardens, a 600-acre natural rhododendron garden, reached by Elk Mountain Scenic Highway and the Blue Ridge Parkway; and Chimney Rock, a 45-minute drive southeast of Asheville.

Brevard (pop. 3,061) is in the center of the beautiful Sylvan Valley, surrounded by mountains. The main entrance to the Pisgah National Forest is 2 miles northeast on U. S. 276. This highway leads through the forest for 37 miles, giving access to most of the points of interest.

Bryson City (pop. 1,600) is a principal gateway to the national park from North Carolina. Within view of the town are such towering peaks as Clingman's Dome, Mount Guyot, Mount LeConte, Siler's Bald and Thunderhead. Bryson City is a resort and a growing industrial center.

Cherokee (pop. 225) is the headquarters of the Cherokee Indian Reservation, and the scene of the Cherokee Indian Fair, held early in October each year. On the reservation live 2,600 Cherokees, the remnants of the once powerful tribe which originally owned all this land. The reservation covers approximately 60,000 acres. The Indian School, the hospital and the shops of native crafts, chiefly baskets and pottery, are of interest.

Hendersonville (pop. 5,381) is a popular mountain resort, in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Several private roads lead to the tops of mountains, from which fine views are obtained. Points of interest in the vicinity are: Laurel Park and Lake, 2 miles out 5th St. W.; Jumpoff Mountain, 5 miles west; St. John's in the Wilderness Church (1832), 3 miles south; and Old Calvary Church (1859), 9 miles north.

Mount Pisgah is reached by the Pisgah Motor Road from U. S. 276 or from Candler. The mountain is 5,749 feet high and may be climbed by good dirt road to within a mile of the summit. It affords one of the finest views in North Carolina.

Waynesville (pop. 2,940) is a popular tourist town, located on the road from Asheville to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. The Cataloochee Creek Area, on the eastern border of the park, may also be reached from here, via State 284, but this section is not connected with the main part of the park by any road. Points of interest in and around Waynesville include: the Pigeon Loop, a popular drive through scenic Pigeon Gap; Junaluska Mountain; and Lake Logan. The Masonic Shrine and Monument is at Black Camp Gap.

Tennessee Side

Knoxville (pop. 111,575) is the gateway to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park from the west. The 100-mile Scenic Loop to the park and return, via Sevierville, Gatlinburg, Kinzel Springs and Maryville, affords views of Mount LeConte, Mount Guyot, Clingman's Dome and other lofty peaks, and connects with the Newfound Gap Highway near Gatlinburg.

Knoxville is the business center of the rich East Tennessee Valley, a burley tobacco market and a livestock center. The famous Tennessee marble is quarried in this vicinity, some of the quarries being within the city limits and others in the Asbury district, about 5 miles east. Located in Knoxville are the University of Tennessee, the John Randolph Neal College of Law, the Knoxville College for Negroes, the Experiment Station of the University of Tennessee College of Agriculture, and the Tennessee School for the Deaf.

Points of interest in Knoxville include: the grave of John Sevier, first governor of Tennessee; the Governor Blount Home, built in 1792, home of the Governor of the Territory South of the Ohio; First Presbyterian churchyard; Knoxville National Cemetery; and Chilhowee Park.

Gatlinburg (pop. 1,500), a popular resort, is the principal Tennessee gateway to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. It is at the foot of Mount LeConte, 6,593 feet in elevation. The climb to the top is a favorite with hikers; halfway up is Rainbow Falls, a graceful 83-foot fall from a rock bluff. The Russell Hanlon Museum has a replica of a room in an old mountain cabin and what is reputed to be the largest jug collection in the world.

Kinzel Springs (pop. 100) is a mountain resort near the western border of the park. From here a road leads into the heart of the park to Cades Cove. Great Smoky Mountain Caverns can be reached by a short side trip off the road to Cades Cove.

Maryville (pop. 5,600) is 16 miles from the park boundary on the 100-mile Scenic Loop. Maryville College is located here. Two miles north, at Alcoa, are three large plants of the Aluminum Company of America.

Newport (pop. 3,575) is on the scenic road which crosses the park area along its eastern border, to Cove Creek and Waynesville, N. C. At the southwest edge of the town is the John Sevier Game Preserve, covering 125,000 acres.
