

John Brown's Raid

"Slavery is a state of war."
- John Brown

Preparing for War

On July 3, 1859, Brown arrived in Harpers Ferry, accompanied by his sons, Oliver and Owen, and Jeremiah Anderson. In the preceeding months, he had raised money from other abolitionists and ordered weapons-- pikes and guns-- to be used in his war against slavery. Using the alias Isaac Smith, Brown rented the Kennedy Farm about 7 miles from the Ferry, on the Maryland side of the Potomac River. Throughout the summer Brown's Army gathered at the farmhouse. Numbering twenty- one at the time of the raid, these men stayed hidden in the attic by day, reading, writing letters, polishing their rifles and playing checkers. To avoid being seen by curious neighbors, they could only come out at night. To keep up the appearance of a normal household, Brown sent for his daughter, fifteen- year- old Annie, and Oliver's wife, seventeen- year- old Martha. The girls prepared meals, washed clothes and kept nosy neighbors at a distance. Brown studied maps and conferred with John Cook, his advance- man in the Ferry, about the town, armory operations, train schedules and any other information deemed valuable to his plan. On September 30, Brown sent Martha and Annie home to New York. The time was near. On Sunday, October 16, Brown called his men together. Following a prayer, he outlined his battle plans and instructed them, "Men get your arms; we will proceed to the Ferry."

Striking a Blow for Freedom

October 16, 1859

- 8:00 pm Brown and 18 of his men advance towards Harpers Ferry.
- 10:30 pm The men take both bridges, the U.S. Armory and Arsenal and the U.S. Rifle Works on Hall's Island.
- 12:00 am Slave owners Lewis Washington and John Allstadt are taken hostage and their slaves are freed.

October 17

- 1:25 am A Baltimore & Ohio passenger train stops at the bridge. Heyward Shepherd, a free African American and railroad employee, is shot and mortally wounded as he investigates the train's delay.
- 4 to 5 am Hostages are held in the Armory fire engine house.
- Daylight Messengers carry the alarm of slave revolt to nearby towns. Brown seizes armory employees as they report to work.
- 7:00 am Townspeople begin firing on the raiders. Groceryman Thomas Boerly is killed by return fire.
- 10:00 am Local militia units take positions surrounding Brown's men, cutting off escape routes. Dangerfield Newby is shot - the first raider to die. Raider William Thompson is captured under a white flag when Brown asks for a truce.

I came here from Kansas and this is a slave state; I want to free all the negroes in this state; I have possession now of the United States armory, and if the citizens interfere with me, I must only burn the town and have blood.

- John Brown to the armory watchman

I wanted you particularly for the moral effect it would give our cause having one of your name, as a prisoner.

John Brown to hostage
Col. Lewis Washington

...before this day's sun shall have set, you and your companions will be corpses.

- Daniel Young
Armory Worker

Dear Husband, Master is in want of money...he may sell me...come this fall money or no money.

Harriet Newby, slave,
a letter to husband,
Dangerfield Newby

Noon	Raiders Watson Brown and Aaron Stevens are shot while carrying a second flag of truce.
1:00 pm	Raider William Leeman is killed as he attempts to escape across the Potomac.
2:00 pm	Citizens storm the U.S. Rifle Works. Raider John Kagi and Ben and Jim - two liberated slaves - are killed and Raider Lewis Leary is mortally wounded as they try to escape across the Shenandoah River. Raider John Copeland is captured. At the Armory, Fontaine Beckham, mayor of Harpers Ferry, is shot and killed as he ventures, unarmed, too close to the fighting. A drunken mob, enraged by the mayor's death, murders William Thompson and tosses his body into the Potomac.	You may take my life, but 80,000 will arise up to avenge me, and carry out my purpose of giving liberty to the slaves. - William Thompson to the mob who killed him
3:00 pm	At the Armory, militiamen free most of the hostages and force Brown and his men into the engine house.
Dark	Hundreds of excited militiamen and townspeople jam the streets of Harpers Ferry. Raiders Albert Hazlett and Osborne Anderson, overlooked by townspeople, leave the Arsenal and escape across the Potomac. Raider Stewart Taylor is shot and killed. Raiders Owen Brown, John Cook, Barclay Coppoc, Francis Meriam and Charles Tidd, guarding supplies in Maryland, escape into the hills.	But for fear of sacrificing the lives of some of the gentlemen held by them as prisoners in a midnight assault, I should have ordered the attack at once. -Col. Robert E. Lee
11:00 pm	Col. Robert E. Lee and 90 U.S. Marines arrive by train from Washington, DC.
October 18
Early	Oliver Brown dies.	If you die, you die in a good cause, fighting for liberty. If you must die, die like a man. - John Brown to his son, Oliver
7:00 am	Brown refuses to surrender to Lt. J.E.B. Stuart. A Marine storming party smashes the doors of the engine house. One Marine is killed and another wounded. Lt. Israel Green beats Brown with his sword. Raiders Dauphin Thompson and Jeremiah Anderson are killed. Raiders Edwin Coppoc and Shields Green surrender. Wounded raiders Aaron Stevens and Watson Brown are captured. No hostages are injured. Watson Brown dies the next day.

The Aftermath
Seventeen people were killed in the raid- - two slaves, three townsmen, a slaveholder, one Marine and ten of Brown's men.	November 2 Brown was sentenced to hang on the gallows. All six of Brown's captured men were tried and hanged. Five escaped.
John Brown, Aaron Stevens, Edwin Coppoc, Shields Green and John Copeland were taken to jail in Charles Town, Virginia, on October 19. Albert Hazlett and John Cook were subsequently captured and jailed with the others.	Brown was executed December 2, 1859. Brown's wife, Mary, took his body home to North Elba, New York for burial.	I, John Brown, am now quite certain that the crimes of this guilty land will never be purged away but with blood. I had, as I now think, vainly flattered myself that without very much bloodshed it might be done. - John Brown, December 2, 1859
Faced with charges of murder, conspiring with slaves to rebel and treason against the state of Virginia, John Brown's trial began October 27 and lasted just five days. Jurors took only 45 minutes to reach a decision—guilty of all charges. On	A contemporary newspaper account foretold a grim future. "The Harpers Ferry invasion has advanced the cause of disunion more than any other event that has happened since the formation of the Government."
	Hope of compromise between the North and South slipped into oblivion. Civil War was inevitable.
