Abraham Lincoln in Indiana

In the fall of 1816, Thomas and Nancy Lincoln packed their belongings and their two children, Sarah, 9, and Abraham, 7, and left their Kentucky home bound for the new frontier of southern Indiana.

Abraham Lincoln lived in Indiana for 14 years, from the age of 7 to 21. During that time he grew physically and mentally. With his hands and his back, he helped carve a farm and home out of the wilderness. With his mind, he began to explore the world of books. He experienced adventure and he came to know deep personal loss. The death of his mother in 1818 and the death of his beloved sister, Sarah, in 1828 left deep emotional scars. But all those experiences helped make him into the man that he became.
