The Nez Perce (Nee-Me-Poo) National Historic Trail was authorized in 1986. Commemorating the 1877 war and flight, the trail extends about 1,170 miles from the vicinity of Wallowa Lake, Oregon to Bear Paw Battlefield near Chinook, Montana.

ince aiding the Lewis and Clark expedition in 1805, whites knew the Nez Perce Indians as friends. The Nez Perce (in their language Niimiipuu, meaning "the people") lived in bands, welcoming traders and missionaries to a land framed by the rivers, mountains, and valleys of present day southeastern Washington, northeastern Oregon, and north central Idaho.

Fifty years after the Corps of Discovery, Washington Territorial Governor Isaac I. Stevens met in council with Nez Perce leaders. The resulting 1855 Treaty with the U.S. Government guaranteed the tribes rights to their ancestral homeland in perpetuity, and set aside a Nez Perce reservation of some 5,000 square miles.

In 1860, encroaching prospectors struck gold in Idaho. Thousands of miners, merchants and settlers overran Nez Perce land, seized resources and committed depredations against tribal members. In 1863 the federal government responded with new treaty talks. This time, the U.S. wanted most of the Nez Perce reservation – including their treasured Wallowa region of northeastern Oregon and the Payette Lake region.

Many chiefs refused and angrily departed. Amid uncertainty, pressure, and promises, the remaining chiefs reluctantly agreed to a reservation 90 percent smaller than that of 1855. Without authority they ceded lands of Nez Perce who left the council, in a document thereafter called "the Thief Treaty."

Non-Indians distinguished those who signed as "treaty" Nez Perce; those who had not were the "non-treaty." The 1863 Treaty divided the tribe and foreshadowed a war whose repercussions are still felt.

The Nez Perce eluded more than 2,000 soldiers, civilian volunteers, and scouts from other Indian tribes, on a circuitous route through four states. They sought safety among Crow allies on the eastern Montana plains; when this failed, their last hope was sanctuary in Canada. After fleeing more than 1,100 miles they were trapped at Snake Creek, at the base of the Bears Paw Mountains in Montana, and forced to submit to Colonel Nelson A. Miles on October 5, 1877 – only 40 miles from Canada.

General William T. Sherman called the Nez Perce saga "the most extraordinary of Indian wars." Today, their route is designated the Nez Perce (Nee-Me-Poo) National Historic Trail by act of Congress.

This historic route was used in its entirety only once; however, component trails and roads making up the Trail saw generations of travel prior to and after the 1877 conflict. Some became linked to modern road systems, while other stretches were abandoned for more direct routes better suited to automobiles. In places the original Nez Perce Trail can be experienced on the landscape today.

In July of 1877 Tim'ine 'ilp'ilpnim (Chief Redheart) and his band returned from hunting in Montana to discover their homeland embroiled in conflict. Determined not to join the war, they believed General Howard when he promised them safe conduct to the reservation. Instead their horses were seized, their hair cut and they were forcibly taken, all 33 men, women and children, to Fort Vancouver. There they were held until April 1878 when they finally returned to Idaho.

Fort Walsh, Canada

Between September 30 and October 5, 1877 nearly 300 Nez Perce men, women and children managed to escape the Bears Paw battle and make their way the last forty miles to Canada. Along the way some of the people stopped at Cree, Assiniboine, Gros Ventre, and Metis villages strung along the Milk River. At some camps the Nez Perce found refuge, at others, death.

For a time some Nez Perce found refuge with the Lakota who had also fled to Canada after the Battle of the Little Bighorn in 1876. The North West Mounted Police at Fort Walsh assured them they were welcome as long as they remained peaceful and stayed in Canada.

In summer 1878 the U.S. government sent a delegation to persuade the Nez Perce refugees to return to American soil, and rejoin Joseph's people. Some, like Piyóop'yoo xayxáyxnim (Chief White Bird's) followers, chose to remain in Canada, while others opted to return on their own.

The Nez Perce National Historic Trail ends at the Bear Paw Battlefield, but the story did not end there. Colonel Nelson A. Miles had begun implementing the terms of Chief Joseph's surrender when the army's senior commander, General William T. Sherman, announced an alarming change of plans. Rather than returning to Idaho as Miles promised, the Nez Perce were ordered to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. From there they were sent on to Baxter Springs, then the Quapaw Reservation and Ponca Agency in Oklahoma. The conditions were so dire that most Nez Perce babies born in Indian Territory died, and were buried there.

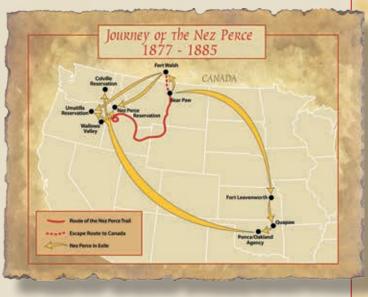

"A worse place to put a camp of four hundred human beings, mostly women and children could not have been selected; in fact it would seem as if this spot had been selected for the express purpose of putting an end to Chief Joseph and his band....One half were sick.....All were filled with the poisonous malaria of the camp."

"I cannot tell how much my heart suffered for my people while at Leavenworth. The Great Spirit Chief who rules above seemed to be looking some other way, and did not see what was being done to my people."

Hinmatóowyalahtq'it (Chief Joseph)

In July 1878, leaving an unknown number who had died and were buried near Fort Leavenworth, the Nez Perce were transported by rail car to Baxter Springs, Kansas, enroute to what would be their final "home in exile" at a reservation set aside for them near present-day Tonkawa, Oklahoma.

In 1885 these remaining people boarded a train at Arkansas City to start the bittersweet journey west, some to reservations at Lapwai or Umatilla and others who chose to go with Chief Joseph to the Colville reservation. Their hearts were heavy with the memories of those they had lost along the trail and those they were leaving behind in this country of exile.
